Tackling Unemployment in Europe through Social Inclusion and Training Programmes

Overview

Eurostat estimates that approximately 23 million people in the EU-27 were unemployed in October 2011, an increase of 440,000 since October 2010 with the highest rates in Spain, Greece and Latvia, respectively. However, according to a review carried out by the European Commission, the EU labour market is recovering slowly and unevenly with the unemployment rate falling in twelve Member States, compared with a year ago. Long-term unemployment is one of the main concerns of policy makers. Apart from its financial and social effects on personal life, long-term unemployment negatively affects social cohesion and, ultimately, will stifle economic growth. Educational qualifications are still the best insurance against unemployment, and figures show that almost every Member State experienced upward trends in the general level of educational attainment in 2010.

Within the context of the European Employment Strategy, there are a number of measures that are designed to help encourage people to remain in work or find a new job, including: the promotion of a life-cycle to work, life-long learning, improving support for those seeking a job, as well as ensuring equal opportunities. In line with the Europe 2020 Strategy, the European Employment Strategy seeks to create more and better jobs throughout the EU. The strategy provides a framework for EU countries to share information, discuss issues and coordinate their employment policies.

This special International Symposium provides a timely opportunity for stakeholders and civil societies across the EU to discuss the root challenges behind current unemployment trends, exchange best practices and consider mechanisms for overcoming existing employment gaps in the labour market. The Symposium will highlight some latest developments and initiatives for promoting social inclusion, better access to education and training and examine their contribution to building a sustainable lifestyle model for all European citizens.

“The steep rise in joblessness across our Union is the most painful social symptom of this economic crisis. In particular, we hear the message of frustration and anger coming from young people. That is why I want our next country-specific recommendations to address the plight of young people in every one of our Member States. We will also continue to press hard for reforms to remove structural obstacles to employment. The roadmap we have presented ahead of the European Council also proposes growth-enhancing measures capable of creating hundreds of thousands of new jobs”

- José Manuel Barroso, President of the European Commission, 17 October 2011

“Job creation must go hand in hand with recovery. This is my priority. While increasing the pace of structural reforms, improving governance and reinforcing economic policy coordination, we also need to find the right balance between budgetary consolidation and policies that bolster growth and create jobs. As a part of this, we need to strengthen the social dialogue at all levels in every country”

- László Andor, EU Commissioner for Employment, Social Affairs and Inclusion,
17 October 2011
